Children need the significant adults in their lives—parents, teachers, caregivers—to provide them with the two “L-words” of love and leadership. In the case of love, it must be unconditional. In the case of leadership, it must be unequivocal. In these often humorous and thought-provoking presentations, family psychologist John Rosemond describes the contemporary parenting conundrum in clear, compelling terms and then describes a practical, tested solution. He teaches how to motivate maximum child compliance, no matter the setting, by using “leadership speech.”
